year after year, used the forms of the House to resist the will of the House-to resist it, as Mr. Gladstone himself said, otherwise than by argument and vote. It was a small minority successfully defying a great majority and the overwhelm ing sense of the House, and doing it, no matter what Mr. McCarthy may say, with the purpose of bringing the House into contempt.

Whether there be obstruction at present is disputed. You have in the affirmative the whole body of disinterested Irish testimony quoted above, You have on the same side the admission of Colonel Saunderson that he, at any rate, obstructed. You have, per contra, the indignant denial of the Unionist organs and leaders: though I imagine Mr. Balfour might go so far as to own that some of Mr. James Lowther's proceedings were in the nature of obstructions. But what has really happened, and what may perhaps occur again, is something very unlike the old obstruction. It is now a use of the forms of the House within both the letter and spirit of the rules of the House. They have been used for a brief period, for a definite purpose, by a great minority to insure a fair opportunity for debating a great question which the majority, under the lead of an imperious Minister, sought to withhold and deny. Mr. Dillon may think it abominable, and Mr. O'Brien may describe it as gross, but I apprehend it is heartily approved by the great body of public opinion in England.

WEDDINGS PAST AND TO COME.

There was another military wedding to mark the Easter season, that of Miss Clara Jay Williams, daughter of George G Williams, president of the Chemical National Bank of New-York, to Frank Browne Keech. lieutenant in the 5th Infantry, United States Army, at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon in St. Bartholomew's The Key, Dr. David S. DR. E. E. HALE'S SEVENTY-FIRST BIRTHDAY. Boston, April 4 (Special).-The Rev. Dr. Edwar le was kept bosy all day yesterday receiving and acknowledging the hearty congratulations and affectionate wishes of neighbors, friends and admirers on the attainment of his seventy-first birth-day. By the first mail delivery in the morning he received several letters full of kindly references to the day, and soon afterward bunches and clusters of vers began to be delivered at the door of the quaint cM mansion in Roxbury. About 11 o'clock Dr. Hale went to the "Lend a Hand" office, at No. 3 Hamilton Place, for a short time; and there several old friends offered their congratulations personally. After signing the petition asking the Mayor to secure, if possible, the acceptance of the rocking-chairs for the old women on Rains ford Island, he returned home and spent the afternorn quietly there. In the evening Dr. Halo strended the informal reception given in his honor by he surjableness in the vestry of the church in Exe-

THE PRESIDENT'S COUNTRY HOME

AN OLD-FASHIONED HOUSE NEAR WASHINGTON PREPARED FOR HIS FAMILY.

Washington, April 4.-The President and Mrs. Cleveland are going to have a home in the country, as they did four years ago. By the end of the present month it is expected that the Middleton house on the Woodley Lane road will be ready for their occupation. The house is a large, old-fashioned structure roomy, comfortable, and occupying an ideal location. It is nearer the city than Oak View, which was the home of the President during his former Adminis-

The house stands on an elevated knoll, surounded with fine old oaks. It is some distance rounded with fine old oaks. It is some distance back from the road, and commands an extended view, not only of the rolling country to the north-perhaps the most striking and pleturesque section of the famous Rock Creek region-but from the windows there is one of the most charming and striking views of the city to be found in this vicinity. In every way the house is larger than the one at Oak View. There are some thirty acres of land about the house, and if Mr. Cleveland is inclined to agricultural pursuits he can have ample swing for his fancy in this direction.

"QUEEN MARY."

PRINCESS LOUIS OF BAVARIA, "QUEEN MARY IV. OF ENGLAND," AND HER HUSBAND.

No royal anniversary of recent years has been relebrated with more genuine goodwill and hearti-ness on the part of the people than that of the silver wedding of Prince and Princess Louis of Bavaria a few weeks ago. Anniversaries in Germany play an important part in things social and political, and the people seem happy when they can assist in their celebration. The request of the future King and Queen of Bavaria to allow the twenty-fifth recurrence of the day of their marriage to pass by molecred was naturally disregarded in the land of "gemuethlichkert and good cheer." No one forgot the day; the whole country was "en fete," and the nobleman in the castle, the peasant in the valley-villages, and the sheplards in the nuts of the mountains of the Tyrol drank the health of the Prince and Princess with equal glee.

With the possible exception of the King and Queen of Greece, Prince and Princess Louis of Havaria are the most popular royalties in Europe. The Pavariam adore them, and it is small wonder. Since the brill-lant days of kings "Max" and Louis I, when modern Munich was created, the Bavarians have been unfor thrate in the "rulers by divine right" who held sway over them. For almost a quarter of a century they have been subject to mad kings. Louis II, "the handsomest man who ever sat upon a throne," even in the early years of his reign, thought more of his castles in Spain" than his real castles in Munich. A note from Wagner or the actor of the Court Theatre, who happened to fill his fancy, commanded his attention before the communication of a cabinet secretary or a counsellor of State. When his life ended in the terrible tragedy of the lake the people who had been obliged to pay the millions squandered on useless and fantastic palaces felt little regret.

PRINCE LOUIS OF BAVARIA.

But the advent of mad King Otto was no solace. Time and again some legislator, a little more daring than his colleagues, has proposed a change in the ab-surd provision of the constitution allowing an insane monarch to retain his crown and throne. But the proposal has never left the committee-room, and the head of the Wittelsbuchs remains king. It is true not at all likely that the Prince-Regent will ever scend the throne. Physicians who recently exam tively sound, and likely to live for years to come His mind is hopelessly clouded, and he passes his days smoking eigarettes in a padded room, venturing only seldom into the open air in the care of numerous attendants. That he retains his marvellous physical strength under the untoward conditions in which he flives is strange. Days pass by when he absolutely refuses nourishment, believing that it is per-onet. It matters not if attendants prove the contrary before him; be, of course, cannot comprehend proof. He cries and sobs by the hour. Only for a few moments he seems at times to remember that he is a king and commands and insists upon hearing the empty words, evanuation of the residual contents have a way, and he sinks again into the deplorable condition which has crushed folin during the seven years of his unhappy reign.

physical welfare of the monarch and the age of Prince Luitpold-he is beyond three-score and tenlead the Bavarians to take especial interest in Prince Louis. Prince Luitpold, It is also understood, will abdicate in his favor should King Otto happen to die unexpectedly. As the Prince will be the first same king, Princess Louis will be the first queen in many years to share the Bavarian throne. The mad love story of King Louis II, the belief in the unfaithfulness of his bride, which led him to remain a bachelor, is known. King Otto, of course, never married. The Princess, therefore, occupies an unusual place in the hearts of her future subjects for this reason alone. But other reasons explain also the love they bear Princess Marie Theresa Henriette Dorothea was the only child of Archduke Ferdinand of Austria-Este and the Archduchess Franziska Marie, and was born in 1849. To the followers of the House of Stuart however, the Princess is more than the future queen of Bavaria. She is a direct descendant of the Scottish house and the Jacobites refer to her as "Mary IV of England." When the Legitimists of England, Scotland and Ireland cry "God save the Queen," it is to the Bavarian woman they refer. She is, in fact, the oldest representative of the Stuarts now living. she has never lent aid to the absurd policy of the few Englishmen who still believe their salvation lies in a restoration of the Stuarts. She knows, of course, that the Stuart cause is dead for all time, and she in the Stuart cause is dead for all time, and sale is content in the prospect of ruling over the good Bavarians. There is nothing of the conspirator in her frank, open character. Her life is simplicity itself, and her time is taken up in the discharge of her numerous household duties. She is a model "Hauston" of the sale is policied to keep a share control of exfrau," and is obliged to keep a sharp control of ex-penses. The income of the Prince, between whom and the throne two lives still stand, is not great, and he days of Wittelsbach extravagance are at an end. Princess Marie is neither homely nor handson People who still have the idea that Princes and Princesses must look different from men and women of other stations in life would be disappointed in her appearance, which is without any distinction. Were not for the greetings and signs of respect shown her in the streets of Munich a stranger would pass her by unnoticed. She can be seen, however, almost any day, walking in the Maximilian-strasse, entering any day, walking in the Maximilian-strasse, entering the various shops, or even bargaining with market-women over the price of goose-for roast-goose is a favorite dish on the princely table. In her daily rounds she is usually accompanied by one or more of her children. No royal couple of Europe has been so blessed with children as the Prince and Princess Louis. On the day of their silver wedding eleven of their children stood about them. The oldest, Prince Rupert, was born in 1860, and the youngest, Princess Gondelinde, was born in 1891. Two-children are al ready dead.

The Prince looks more like a Bavarian farmer of the better class or a professor at an agricultural college than like the traditional king. He is rather short of stature, broad-shouldered and stout. Kind, blue eyes, covered by old-fashioned gold spectacles, light up his heavily bearded face. His appearance in his general's uniform is not martial, and for that reason he loves to doff it and wear the Tyrolean hat, with the rooster's feather in the band, and the darkgreen bunting coat, drawn in at the back. The Prince, however, pretends to be only a "Landwirth," and is an authority upon all agricultural questions.
He is a good speaker, and never misses a session of the Reichsrath when agrarian questions are before it for discussion.

A little more than a year ago he created a sensa-tion in a debate with one of the ministers of the crown. The secretary of the Interior was advocating the adoption of a new system of agrerian laws which had prepared, when suddenly the Frince sprang to his feet and said that the laws should not be promulgated.

"Many bad laws," he thundered forth, in the deep, base tones of which he is master, "have been made for Bavaria, and these should not be added to the list."

for Bayaria, and these should not be added to the list."

The Minister was disconcerted and confused. The Prince added that, he being a "Landwirth," he knew whereof he spoke, and would prepare an act himself for submission to the council. A few months later he appeared at another session of the body with his portfolio in hand. He read his proposals, defended them in a long argument, cutting the air in his vehemence with a great lead penell such as filsmarek was wont to use—but all in vain. His colleagues declined to adopt his views, and his proposals were laid upon the table. He took his defeat philosophically and harbored no fil-will toward the councillors who had failed to agree with him. But he promises to be a wise ruler, who understands his subjects and place. It is to be hoped—and expected—that in him will be realized the fond dreams of the unhappy Bayarians.

FASHION NOTES.

A BEAUTIFUL INVALID GOWN-THE MODERN BERTHA-A TRAVELLING CLOAK.

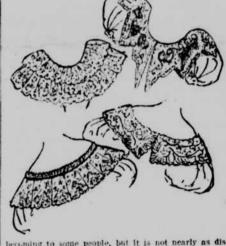

The 1830 costumes are said to be growing more and nore popular abroad. At the recent court ball in Vienna, the Duchess of Cumberland-the Princess of Wales's sister Thyra-was resplendent in an 1830 rob of blue brocade trimmed with yellow lace and yellow

This charming gown, in which a fair-faced invalid may receive her friends, is of pale green cashmere and surah, trimmed with ribbons of the same shade and with beautiful white lace. The gown is cut in Princess snape and is so arranged as to seem attached to the surah blouse front by bows of ribbon. This full surah blouse is gathered to the bottom of a small yoke of lace and is further decorated with a sort of little fichu. The lace trimming forms a collar, then falls in graceful flow to the bottom of the garment. The fastenings are invisible and are at the left of the front. The sleeves are large and laid in folds at the top. A fall of lace trims the bottom of them.

Worth has conferred an inestimable benefit upon the lace-makers of the world by bringing the almost obsolete lace bertha again into fastion, and it is indoubtedly true that the widespread revival in the demand for real lace is due largely to him. flat, severely simple berthas that he affects just now require the best of lace as well as special patterns and shapes. For older women especially nothing could be hand-somer and more appropriate than a low-cut corsage of black velvet, or better still black satin, trimmed only with a costly bertha of real lace. Soft lace in gathered frills is perhaps more becoming to some people, but it is not nearly as dis tinguished tooking.

Ong of the most becoming, graceful and u garments for a woman in travelling is a long cloak. Made in light cloth and lined with dainty slik it is indispensable for summer. The cut shows a particutarly stylish model.

It is an equally good pattern for a duster made in should be remembered that a rather large hat should always be worn with a long cloak.

BLACK SATIN IN LONDON.

From Black and White.

Until I had worn the new skirt I was a devout worshipper at its shrine, for in truth it is smart, but now having suffered in its cause, in utter wearlness I despise it; that I shall go on wearing it, being a martyr in the cause of La Mode, goes without saying, but I do not like it. The method of triuming these skirts continues daily to vary, a considerable amount of ingenuity being brought into play for this purpose. My favorite black satin appears forming rolls round the hem and round the knees, this in sets of threes looking extremely well on black serge. A black serge dress of which I heard recently was trimmed from the hem to the walst with rolls of black satin, and it was worn with a black satin blouse and a coat of black serge, with huge sleeves of black satin, and it was worn with a black satin blouse and a coat of black serge, with huge sleeves of black satin, and it was worn with a black satin blouse and a coat of black serge, with huge sleeves of black satin and a black satin cape over the shoulders. Crowned with one of the new hats in violet straw trimmed with large double bows of violet velvet, the effect was thoroughly charming to man and bound to excite the jealous feelings of woman—not that I seriously believe women have any jealous feelings toward each other, I am convinced it gives them as much pleasure to meet each other looking giaes. The masculine man would not agree with me on this point, for man has two prominent fads, the one to declare all women gushing and the other to imagine that they are envious of their sister women. Both are terribly silly. Women are eminently generous in their appreciation of each other, and their enthuslastic manners are simply worn with a desire for popularity. For, as a clever lady said to me the other day, "If you want to succeed in any career, be it seedal or commercial, you have only to assume a Cheshire cattike smile with sufficient persistence under ail sorts and canditions of circumstances."

More black satin: I have seen nothing ci

and manties of all descriptions made of black satin, and, far from familiarity breeding my contempt, it encouraged my further admiration. There was a black satin cape reaching to the waist in very full folds, with a frill round the shoulders and a ruif round the throat ited in the front with ribbons; and there was another cut almost on the same lines, with the collar of violet velvet hemmed with jet; and yet another had the shoulders sloping and pleats less aggressive, and was trimmed with a frill of lace round the throat. Capes there were here by the dozen, each one with some special charm. The continued popularity of the large sleeve will induce us all to adopt capes in preference to jackets. It is quite impossible, even with the assistance of the most amitable cavalier, to comfortably wriggie into the sleeves of the coat with the huge sleeves of our dresses, so I suppose I must cry. "Alve the cape!" for there is no diminution in the sleeve fashionable, although its fulness continues to droop submissively to the clow, yet its fulness exists; it flourishes large, wide and long. A coat of black satin, for which I confess I would cheerfully sacrifice the correct demeanor of any sleeve of any costume I might be wearing. I found to-day, made in black satin, tight-fitting, with a belt of jet just below the waist, the basque gored to set out, and the sleeves huge at the top and tight-fitting at the wrist; and at the throat of this was a satin collar and a velvet revers.

MONSIGNOR SATOLLI VISITS BOSTON.

HE IS ENTERTAINED AT DINNER AND LISTENS

TO THE DISCUSSIONS OF SEMINARIANS. Boston, April 4.-Monsignor Satolli, the Apostolic Delegate from the Pope to the Catholic Church of the United States, arrived in Boston this morning. Father Aubiff, the Ebrarian of the Catholic University, ac componied him. They proceeded immediately to St.
John's Seminary, at Brighton, where a dinner in Monsignor Satelli's honor was given at noon. This was followed by a disputation between four of the seminarians on theological questions. Among those present were Archbishop Williams, Bishop Brady, the Rev. Richard Neagle, the chancellor of the diocese; the Rev. L. M. A. Corcoran, rector of the Cathedral, and the trustees and examiners of the seminary.

To-morrow morning at 0 o'clock Monsignor Satolli will address the students and clergy of the diocese. He will visit Archbishop Williams to-morrow, and will have Boston for Washington at noon on account of the arrival of his assistants in New-York. His coming at this time has no official significance to the Boston Archdiocese, being prompted simply by the courtesy of the faculty of the seminary and Monsignor sat ill's deep interest in theological studies.

MONSIGNOR SBARETTI GOES TO WASHINGTON. Monsigner Donato Sburettl, the auditor, and the Rev. Monsignor Donato Stiretti, the analor, and the lev-Dr. Ercole Papi, the secretary of the ecclesiastical court of Monsignor Satolli, went to Washington yesterday after-noen. They arrived on the Servia on Monday and at once went to Archbishop Corrigan's house. Accompanied by Father Connolly, the Archbishop's private secretary, they made everal calls yesterday morning. In the afternoon Father Connolly saw them off to Washington. Archbishop Corrigan left town last night.

MRS. CLEVELAND'S LAST RECEPTION.

Washington, April 4.-Mrs. Cleveland saw several hundred callers to-day between 12 and 1. All of them came by appointment. Three times as many more came without any appointment, and were much disappointed in not being allowed to go to the Blue Room. Only a few Senators' and members' wives were among the callers. There was a sprinkling of resident friends, but the large crowd was made up entirely of strangers. It is understood that this is the last reception Mrs. Cleveland will hold this spring.

Alexander Salvini's performance of "Don Caesar de Alexander Salvin's performance of "Don Caesar de Bazan" at the Manhattan Opera House on Monday night was delayed by an unusual occurrence. At 5 p m, much of the scenery was unfinished. By hard work the sets of the first, second and third acts were made ready at 8:45 and the curtain was rais d. During the performance of the first act the painters were at work painting the scenery for the last two acts, and were hardly able to fluish it in time to keep the performance moving. Last night the performance began on time and the flual curtain fell at a seasonable hour. fell at a seasonable hour. The funeral of Mrs. Frederic De Belleville, wife of
